About the Journal

Interculturality is a peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary academic journal devoted to the advancement of scholarly study and research in all issues that deal with societal development or social development and the meetings and dialogues among cultures. Issues that the journal study includes globalisation, postcolonialism, political developments, contemporary cultures, the economy of societies, ethnicity, race, leadership, social education, war and peace, violence, conflict, social policies on development, religion, peacebuilding, gender, youth, democracies and different ideologies, civil society, education, communication and the media, indigenous and traditional institutions, environmentalism, philanthropy, humanitarianism, and indeed all issues that concern human cultures and social well-being and welfare.

The journal welcomes original research articles, case studies, theoretical essays, review articles, etc. Contributions can come from any discipline and cultural and regional background. We are highly interested in papers that deal with issues from the Global South and indigenous communities.

Publisher: Scholarly Hub for Intercultural Philosophy (BN 9044628), whose acronym is SHIP, is a Corporate Affairs Commission (CAC) registered publishing platform devoted to advancing rigorous and intellectual scholarship in intercultural philosophies and studies and in other related fields through professional publications of high-quality academic papers, books, journals, and other peer-reviewed scholarly works. Its mission is to foster critical inquiry, cross-cultural philosophical dialogues to promote global understanding and peaceful living among people.

The SHIP exists to support, disseminate and midwife original philosophical ideas from all cultures and traditions. It is concerned with intercultural dialogue across religions, cultures, societies, and all human disciplines. The SHIP upholds rigorous academic standards, originality and methodological rigour in publishing practice. The SHIP meets regularly through its editorial boards and personnel, and engage in scholarly exchange with authors to strengthen the quality of published works. There are also editorial and advisory consultations incidental to the publishing process to ensure academic excellence.

The SHIP operates as an independent and indigenous scholarly platform and aligns with internationally recognised norms on academic publishing.
